

It's a hard time for any employers out there who are having to make the difficult decision to make people redundant. Whilst in a perfect world it would be great to support them with lots of outplacement support, in times of financial difficulty that may not be so simple. Ex travel PR company owner turned business and careers psychologist Paula Gardner has created <https://redundancyrecoveryhub.com> - a value for money, positive psychology-based solution to help employers support their employees at this difficult time.

The hub is a blend of articles, tutorials, interviews with experts and inspiring first-person stories. There is also a bi-weekly live clinic with online career/job hunting coaching from Paula or one of the team.

Membership is very affordable, and has been designed to be a viable and valuable addition or alternative to traditional full-service outplacement.

The Redundancy Recovery Hub has three main sections:

BACK TO WORK - all about getting people back to work in the shortest possible time. Here you'll find material such as how to use LinkedIn to job hunt, interviews with recruiters, advice on online interviews and organising your job searching with Trello.

CHANGING DIRECTION - this section is for anyone who is thinking of using their redundancy to step back, take stock and perhaps change direction to a new career path. We have expert advice and first-person stories from people who started their own business, went freelance, changed careers, went back to University or retrained.

YOU - this covers the other parts of your life that can be impacted by redundancy, such as relationships, finance and health. This section also has tutorials on motivation, mindset and other psychology-based advice and exercises that can help with resilience at the tough time.
